

Phase 2: Candidate Ideas and Interview Questions

CS 5388: Software Project Management - Sprint 1

Team: Samuel Alderete, Jazmin Huerta, Christian Lopez-Matulesy, Emmanuel Saenz and Oscar Vargas.

App Candidate 2: Eating toward a body goal

App 2 (Nutrition)

Problem statement: People trying to bulk, cut, or maintain can't tell in advance whether the day's meals will hit their macro targets, so they log after the fact, fall short, and stop tracking.

Questions

- Tell me about a time when you wanted to track your food intake; how was that process for you?
- What goal or goals were you trying to achieve by tracking your food intake?
- Have you found that tracking your food intake is encouraging or discouraging in achieving your goals? Why?
- When choosing what to eat, what are the factors that weigh in your decision on a day-to-day basis?

App Candidate 3: Entertainment/Events Tracker

App 3 (Entertainment)

Problem statement: People find it hard to find events/places to go to in El Paso/Juarez often finding out after the events have already happened.

Questions

- Tell me about the last public event you attended in the El Paso/Juarez area.
 - Follow-up: How did you hear about this event?
- When interested in attending an event, where do you look for additional information?
- How difficult is it for you to find events you are interested in within the El Paso/Juarez area?
- Tell me about the last time you found out about an event after it was already too late to attend.
 - Follow-up: How often has this happened to you?
- If you could change one thing about how you discover an event near your area, what would you change?

Post-Interview Synthesis (complete within 24 hours)

Exact quote(s) captured, word for word:

R1. I've never really tracked my food before. I've thought about it, but I just never got around to doing it.

R2. I guess if I ever did, it would be to eat better overall

R3. I think it would probably be discouraging for me. I'd feel pressured to keep up with it, and I already struggle with getting motivated.

R3.1 I do think it would somewhat remove that pressure. I'm not too sure though since I've never tried it.

R4. Honestly, I just eat whatever's at home. It depends on what my mom cooks

Did this conversation reveal a specific, repeatable problem? (Yes / No)

One-sentence takeaway:

Has not tried tracking food before and says it would be pressuring to track meals/macros but thinks an app would help remove that pressure.

Exact quote(s) captured, word for word:

R1. I've wanted to track my food before, but I never really committed to it. I just try not to eat too much junk food.

R2. My goal would've been to eat less junk food and maybe get more protein in.

R3. I think tracking could be encouraging at first, but I'd probably get bored of it after a while.

R3.1 I think it would be helpful and make it less boring. Maybe even a little fun.

R4. Day to day, it's mostly what's easy to make or what's available.

Did this conversation reveal a specific, repeatable problem? (Yes / No)

One-sentence takeaway:

Finds it boring to track meals/macros but would try eating less junk and more protein.

- R1. I started tracking my food because I wanted to make sure I wasn't overeating.
- R1.1 No I don't track my macros, just my meals
- R2. My goal was mainly to maintain my weight and to stay consistent with my runs.
- R3. It's encouraging for me. It allows me to track my calories without getting too strict. I like to stay relatively fit, but I'm not all extreme about it either.
- R4. I usually think about how heavy my meals are and whether I've exercised that day.

Did this conversation reveal a specific, repeatable problem? (Yes / No)

One-sentence takeaway:

Tracks meals a few times a week. Does not track macros. App could help push her a little further to start tracking macros.

Exact quote(s) captured, word for word:

R1. I've tracked my protein a few times just to make sure I'm getting enough. It's more casual for me.

R2. I guess the goal was to not let my workouts go to waste by eating it all back.

R3. It's encouraging. It makes it easier to stay on top of my diet, but it does get annoying having to track.

R4. I usually think about what I've eaten that day and what I'll do at the gym. So, if I'm gonna do some cardio then I cut myself a little slack.

Did this conversation reveal a specific, repeatable problem? (Yes / No)

One-sentence takeaway:

Works out regularly, and does not track food, but eats a relatively balanced diet. Could benefit from the app to suggest other healthy foods.

R1. I started meal prepping because it saves time and keeps me from eating out too much. So yeah, I like to meal prep, but I don't really track my macros. R2. My goal was to go on a cut so I could get leaner. So obviously I had to be consistent with my meals. R3. It's definitely encouraging. Especially having the meals already made makes it a lot easier to track. R4. I mean all my meals are the same. When I prep them, I don't make different ones, It's the same thing every day for the week. I do change it up every now and then.

Did this conversation reveal a specific, repeatable problem? (Yes / No)

One-sentence takeaway:

Enjoys meal prepping but does not like to track macros.

Post-Interview Synthesis (complete within 24 hours)

Exact quote(s) captured, word for word:

R1: "Since I was 17 I have been wanting to track my food intake, the process was fairly simple at first since my parents helped me and it was simple to track the food and calories I was eating with apps like myfitnesspal and apple health app."

R2: "I was mainly trying to lose weight or gain muscle."

R3: "I think it is encouraging when you actually stick with it on a day-to-day basis but it is discouraging when you do not keep up with it."

R4: "Mainly protein, caloric intake, and quality of foods like if they are whole foods or not."

Did this conversation reveal a specific, repeatable problem? (Yes / No)

One-sentence takeaway:

It was a simple process for this person to find and start using a food tracking app, they mainly used it as a way to achieve a fitness goal, but they only found it encouraging when they kept up with their goal/tracking; they are looking to track protein, calories and types of foods.

Post-Interview Synthesis (complete within 24 hours)

Exact quote(s) captured, word for word:

R1: "I recently wanted to track my food intake to make sure I was meeting my protein and fiber goals because have been wanting to build more muscle, I used an app called MyFitnessPal and it made it fairly easy since a lot of the items I was eating were in the system already with all their nutrition information. Sometimes I would have to weigh my food to make sure I was hitting my goals but most of the time I would estimate."

R2: "I was trying to build muscle so I wanted to hit a specific protein goal, I also wanted to feel more satisfied and regulate my bowel movements so I was trying to hit a specific fiber goal too. Since I was a little over my goal weight I was also trying to track my consumed calories in a day, but I was not as strict with that one."

R3: "I see it more as encouraging because it makes it a lot easier to know what I have to eat more of to meet my goals. I also think I get to eat more food and feel good about what I'm eating and make sure I actually feel full after eating I see it as a goal but I don't beat myself up over not meeting it some days. I also feel like I can eat more sweets and stuff without feeling guilty as long as I'm still in the range of my goals"

R4: "For my day to day meals it mostly depends on what I have on hand and if I feel like cooking or not, but I usually try to choose easy or fast meals that have enough protein, fiber, and carbs to meet my goals. A lot of times I also choose things that I'm craving, even if it doesn't meet my goals, since I think having meals and snacks that make me happy is also important to maintain a balance and sustainable diet."

Did this conversation reveal a specific, repeatable problem? (Yes / No)

One-sentence takeaway:

This person has found a food tracking app as a helpful tool to meet their fitness goals, it has even encouraged them to feel better about the eating habits, while still allowing for flexibility .

Exact quote(s) captured, word for word:

R1: "I had to consult to an app because as a person who doesn't know much about conversions of body weight to height to calories and stuff, I just found it easier to consult to an app"

R2: "It wasn't really about losing or gaining weight, it was more about being aware of everything that I was eating and not over or undereating but eating exactly what I have to be eating because usually I undereat"

R3: "It's both, I think it's mostly encouraging but whenever you do end up going over your given daily calories and you don't hit your protein, but you go over your sugar or whatever, I think it can be discouraging to really nail. There is never a day for me where I do exactly a hundred percent what I should be doing without going over or under the recommended calories I need to eat. So, I think it can be mostly discouraging, but me sometimes when I do get it right, its encouraging.”

R4: “Mostly it’s what makes me feel good, so I try not to eat too heavy. I have some stomach issues and when I feel uncomfortable that will ruin my day, but in terms of protein stuff I do tend to want to have at least, per dish I try to have like at least one main protein that would be mostly chicken that I eat. And I try to balance it out by trying to eat vegetables and stuff.”

Did this conversation reveal a specific, repeatable problem? (Yes / No)

One-sentence takeaway:

This person has used a food tracking app to find an easy way to ensure she is eating well, not under or over eating, they think that while using an app is mainly discouraging, she finds it encouraging when they are able to stick to their recommended caloric/protein intake.

R2: "My goal was to gain muscle without gaining too much weight."

R3: "It was encouraging for me because it gave me something to follow. I knew if I was getting enough protein instead of just guessing."

R4: "I usually think about protein, price, and whether the food will actually fill me up. If I have a long day at school, convenience matters too."

Did this conversation reveal a specific, repeatable problem? (Yes / No)

One-sentence takeaway:

Tracked protein and calories to gain muscle and found it encouraging because it replaced guessing, but consistency dropped during exams, and daily choices come down to protein, price, and how filling the food is.

R1: "I tried tracking what I ate for about a month. I didn't use an app every day. Sometimes I just wrote down my meals in my notes app. It helped, but I wasn't very strict about it."

R2: "I mainly wanted to eat healthier and stop eating fast food so often."

R3: "It was a little of both. It helped me notice my eating habits, but sometimes seeing everything I ate made me feel like I had messed up if I had a bad day."

R4: "It depends on my schedule. If I get home late, I usually just eat whatever is quick. I also care about price and whether I actually like the food."

Did this conversation reveal a specific, repeatable problem? (Yes / No)

One-sentence takeaway:

Tracked meals loosely in a notes app to cut back on fast food and found it both helpful and discouraging, since a bad day felt like failure, and eats mostly around whatever the schedule allows.

R4: "I think about what I have at home first because I don't want to spend money eating out. Taste and how healthy it is matter too, but some days I just choose whatever is easiest."

Did this conversation reveal a specific, repeatable problem? (Yes / No)

One-sentence takeaway:

Tracked for a few weeks to maintain weight and found it encouraging for awareness, but dropped the measuring part because homemade food was hard to estimate, and now decides based on what is already at home.

Interview Information

Interviewer(s)	Christian Lopez-Matulessy
Date	9/9/2026	Time	1:15 p.m.
Location	UTEP campus
Phase (1 or 2)	Phase 2	Idea or problem area	Candidate 2: Eating toward a body goal

Subject Information

Use a role or descriptor only. Do not record the subject's full name anywhere on this sheet.

Role or descriptor	UTEP college student
How they were reached	In person
Relevant experience with the problem area	Used a tracking app for about a week after friends started tracking calories
Consent to take notes given?	Yes
Consent to follow up later?	Yes

Body: Problem Exploration

Q1: Tell me about a time when you wanted to track your food intake; how was that process for you?

Q2: What goal or goals were you trying to achieve by tracking your food intake?

Q3: Have you found that tracking your food intake is encouraging or discouraging in achieving your goals? Why?

Q4: When choosing what to eat, what are the factors that weigh in your decision on a day-to-day basis?

▪ Follow-Up Probes

R1 follow up -> What part of tracking your food was the easiest or hardest for you?

R1.1 "I stopped because I kept forgetting to log snacks and drinks."

R4 follow up -> Which of those factors usually has the biggest influence on what you choose to eat?

R4.1 "Usually it comes down to what I can afford and what sounds good at the time."

Post-Interview Synthesis (complete within 24 hours)

Exact quote(s) captured, word for word:

R1: "I tried it once because some of my friends were tracking their calories. I downloaded an app and used it for about a week. I stopped because I kept forgetting to log snacks and drinks."

R2: "I wasn't trying to lose a lot of weight. I just wanted to know what I was eating and maybe cut back on junk food."

R3: "For me it was more discouraging because it felt like extra work every time I ate something. I think I would rather just pay attention to what I eat without tracking every calorie."

R4: "Usually it comes down to what I can afford and what sounds good at the time. My class schedule also matters because sometimes I only have a short break to get food."

Did this conversation reveal a specific, repeatable problem? (Yes / No)

One-sentence takeaway:

Tried tracking for about a week because friends were doing it and quit because logging snacks and drinks felt like extra work, and now chooses food based on cost and how much break time is left between classes.

How they were reached	In person
Relevant experience with the problem area	Regularly attends concerts, markets, and local events
Consent to take notes given?	Yes
Consent to follow up later?	Yes

Body: Problem Exploration

Q1: Tell me about the last public event you attended in the El Paso/Juarez area. Follow-up: How did you hear about this event?

“The last event I went to was a small market downtown. One of my friends sent me an Instagram post about it the night before. I probably wouldn't have known about it otherwise.”

Q2: When interested in attending an event, where do you look for additional information?

“I usually check Instagram. If someone sends me an event, I'll look at the business or organizer's page to see the time, location, and other details. Sometimes I'll check TikTok too if that's where I first heard about it.”

Q3: How difficult is it for you to find events you are interested in within the El Paso/Juarez area?

“It's pretty difficult for smaller events. Big concerts are easy to find, but markets, pop-ups, or themed events are harder. Unless you follow the exact business or page hosting it, you might never see it.”

Q4: Tell me about the last time you found out about an event after it was already too late to attend. Follow-up: How often has this happened to you?

“I found out about a car show after seeing people's pictures from it that night. I think I missed it because I wasn't following the page that organized it. That probably happens to me once or twice a month.”

Q5: If you could change one thing about how you discover an event near your area, what would you change?

“I'd want one place where I could see everything happening that weekend instead of having to follow a bunch of different Instagram accounts. It would be easier if events from different places were all together.”

• Follow-Up Probes

Follow-Up Probe: What makes smaller events harder to find?

“They're spread across too many Instagram accounts. There isn't one place where I can just see everything happening that weekend.”

“Unless you follow the exact business or page hosting it, you might never see it.”

“There isn't one place where I can just see everything happening that weekend.”

Did this conversation reveal a specific, repeatable problem? (Yes / No)

One-sentence takeaway:

Participant struggles to discover smaller local events because information is scattered across many social media accounts and would prefer a centralized place to find upcoming events.

Body: Problem Exploration

Q1: Tell me about the last public event you attended in the El Paso/Juarez area. Follow-up: How did you hear about this event?

“The last thing I went to was a concert. My cousin told me about it and sent me the ticket link.”

Q2: When interested in attending an event, where do you look for additional information?

“If somebody sends me something, I'll usually look it up on Google or Facebook to find the location, ticket prices, or whatever else I need. I don't really know any specific El Paso event website that I use.”

Q3: How difficult is it for you to find events you are interested in within the El Paso/Juarez area?

“I think it's difficult. If it's something big, you'll hear about it, but smaller events seem like they're mostly advertised on social media. There are probably a lot of things happening around El Paso that I just never hear about.”

Q4: Tell me about the last time you found out about an event after it was already too late to attend. Follow-up: How often has this happened to you?

“There was a festival downtown that I found out about the day it happened. We already had plans, so we couldn't go. I see stuff like that pretty often where somebody posts pictures and that's the first time I hear about it.”

Q5: If you could change one thing about how you discover an event near your area, what would you change?

“I'd want to hear about things earlier. Usually if my friends and I are going somewhere on the weekend, we need some time to plan it. It would be better if I could see upcoming events several days or even a week ahead.”

▪ Follow-Up Probes

Follow-Up Probe: How far ahead would you normally want to know about an event?

“Probably at least a week. That gives us enough time to see who's going and figure out our plans.”

Body: Problem Exploration

Q1: Tell me about the last public event you attended in the El Paso/Juarez area. Follow-up: How did you hear about this event?

“The last event was a DJ night at a bar. I saw a video advertising it on TikTok.”

Q2: When interested in attending an event, where do you look for additional information?

“I usually go from TikTok to Instagram. If I see something on TikTok, I'll look up the venue's Instagram page to make sure I have the correct date, time, cover charge, and stuff like that. I also follow FitFam.”

Q3: How difficult is it for you to find events you are interested in within the El Paso/Juarez area?

“For things I already like, it's not too bad. The problem is discovering something completely new. Social media usually keeps showing me the same type of stuff because that's what I already interact with.”

Q4: Tell me about the last time you found out about an event after it was already too late to attend. Follow-up: How often has this happened to you?

“I missed a concert in Juárez because I saw a TikTok about it after it happened. I wasn't following the artist. It doesn't happen every week, but definitely enough that I've noticed it.”

Q5: If you could change one thing about how you discover an event near your area, what would you change?

“I'd like El Paso and Juárez events to be together somewhere. Usually I have to search both sides separately. I'd also want it to show me things outside of what TikTok or Instagram already thinks I like.”

• Follow-Up Probes

Follow-Up Probe: Do you normally search El Paso and Juárez separately?

“Usually, yeah. I don't really know anywhere that combines both sides.”

Consent to take notes given?	Yes
Consent to follow up later?	Yes

Body: Problem Exploration

Q1: Tell me about the last public event you attended in the El Paso/Juarez area. Follow-up: How did you hear about this event?

“The last public event I went to was a food festival. One of my classmates mentioned it and a few of us decided to go.”

Q2: When interested in attending an event, where do you look for additional information?

“I'll usually Google it. If I know the name of the event, I'll search for the website or whatever page has the date and location. I don't really use Instagram that much, so I don't have all those local pages some of my friends follow.”

Q3: How difficult is it for you to find events you are interested in within the El Paso/Juarez area?

“I wouldn't say it's easy. If I search Google for things to do, I get a lot of tourist attractions or places that are always open instead of actual events happening that weekend. I'm sure there are more things going on, but I don't know where they're being advertised.”

Q4: Tell me about the last time you found out about an event after it was already too late to attend. Follow-up: How often has this happened to you?

“I found out about a comedy show after one of my classmates said they went. I would've probably gone if I had known about it earlier. Something like that happens every couple months.”

Q5: If you could change one thing about how you discover an event near your area, what would you change?

“I'd want an easier way to see what's actually happening right now without needing Instagram. Google shows me places to visit, but I want something that shows events by date and what's happening this weekend.”

▪ Follow-Up Probes

Follow-Up Probe: What's the biggest problem with using Google for this?

“It tells me places I can go, but it doesn't really show me everything that's actually happening.”

Q1: Tell me about the last public event you attended in the El Paso/Juarez area. Follow-up: How did you hear about this event?

“I went to a market at a brewery recently. I saw the announcement on Instagram because I already follow the brewery.”

Q2: When interested in attending an event, where do you look for additional information?

“I mainly use Instagram. If I see something I'm interested in, I go directly to the business or event page to check the time, address, prices, and whatever else they posted.”

Q3: How difficult is it for you to find events you are interested in within the El Paso/Juarez area?

“For me it's actually pretty easy. I've followed enough local pages that my feed constantly shows me events. Maybe someone who doesn't use Instagram as much would have more trouble.”

Q4: Tell me about the last time you found out about an event after it was already too late to attend. Follow-up: How often has this happened to you?

“I missed a concert a few months ago because I wasn't following the artist, but that doesn't happen to me very often.”

Q5: If you could change one thing about how you discover an event near your area, what would you change?

“I guess I'd make it easier to filter what I'm seeing. Instagram already gives me a lot of events, but sometimes I have to go through a bunch of posts I don't care about. Being able to just choose concerts, markets, food events, or whatever I'm looking for would be nice.”

▪ Follow-Up Probes

Follow-Up Probe: Do you feel like you're checking too many different accounts?

“A little bit, but Instagram already puts everything in one feed for me, so it doesn't really bother me.”

- This is a difficult question because I don't have a number for events that have happened in my area that I am interested in that I'm not aware of, because I'm not aware of them
- last time a comedian showed up, and I think I saw a poster after the fact while I was driving, and because I don't drive in the downtown area that often I never saw the poster until it was too late
- Yes I would like a wish list, I would rather tell you what I'm interested in and have you tell me what's available , instead of showing me all of the events and then having me sift through a bunch of noise, Like I don't care that a coffee shop is having an event, If it's not Pokémon related I don't care

- My wife wanted to go due since coworkers and friends were pressuring her.
- It can be difficult but we typically are able to figure out more details if they are properly advertised.
- There have been several events like this. Most recently there was a concert that we missed and the tickets were already sold out. Also there was another race we couldn't attend because the registration was already full when we found out. It happens semi regularly a few time a year.
- I'm not sure. There isn't a standardized way to find out upcoming event info it would be nice if that was possible but then had would people find out about the standardized way to get notified.

Did this conversation reveal a specific, repeatable problem? (Yes / No)

One-sentence takeaway:

Difficulty in discovering local events, would benefit from a centralized place to discover them.

- The last public event I attended was Winter Fest in El Paso. I follow local social media accounts for the city of El Paso, which is where I saw it advertised. It's also an annual event that I've known about for a few years.
- I usually go straight to the source. I find out who is organizing the event and check their website or social media, especially Instagram.
- It isn't very difficult for El Paso events. As I mentioned earlier, I follow several accounts that promote local events. While I do occasionally miss things, social media is generally reliable for me.
- It usually happens with concerts. The last time was earlier this year. This happens about once a year, usually when an artist comes to town and I don't hear about it until tickets are already sold out or marked up by resellers.
- It would be great if like official local accounts posted a weekly event round-up or calendar. Right now, it feels like a lot of events don't get advertised properly and many people miss out on the opportunity to attend or purchase tickets.

Did this conversation reveal a specific, repeatable problem? (Yes / No)

One-sentence takeaway:

No major frustrations as they rely on an effective marketing strategy through social media.

Exact quote(s) captured, word for word:

I don't go to Juarez, I feel it's still too violent. At least in El Paso, this past weekend we visited the St. Michael's kermes. Instagram. I found a post on the visit elpaso Instagram page.

Instagram. I feel I need information quickly, so pictures, bullet points, swipe for more, and if it grabs my attention, a link or QR code to buy tickets or get info as to where to buy the tickets.

Incredibly. Again, Instagram is my go to but I need to subscribe to multiple users to gather the information. El Paso lacks a one source location to find out any info about events.

This year there was a Margarita festival downtown that I missed. It had quite a few things to do and from the pictures I saw, lots of food to try out.

Not very, it's rare for me to not know of a particular event that interests me. I just follow enough users online within my fields of interest.

If I could sign up for a page or online service that I can click on Interest type formatting, and then those would be delivered to me via email. I could check those out, but then also it would remind me to look at the homepage for any other events around town.

Did this conversation reveal a specific, repeatable problem? (Yes / No)

One-sentence takeaway:

Would prefer a centralized way to be notified of events.

Exact quote(s) captured, word for word:

R1: "The last public event I went to was a trivia night at a local restaurant called House of Rock"

R1.1: "I heard about it through Instagram because we had gone to trivia at another place and I saw that the host put it on his Instagram, so we went."

R2: "Usually it depends on how I hear of the event, but if I saw a flyer and there is a QR code or some sort of information on the flyer I will follow that, but if there is not information and I just heard about it and I kind of know where its happening, I will look on the organizer's Instagram page"

R3: "It isn't difficult but a lot of times I find out about stuff later and think 'oh it would have been good to go' but I always know if there is something going on, but a lot of times I don't know that the stuff is going on."

R4: "The last time that I found out about an event after it happened was a concert at the lowbrow."

R4.1: "I would say it probably happens at least once a month where I'm like: 'oh what, that would've been cool' but probably every 3 weeks on average."

R5: "I wish there were more centralized locations where you could find out about events, there used to be a page that would put all of the events that were going on every week, but they stopped doing that. And I wish there would be more places to put flyers and stuff like that, like there would be some coffee shops that put flyers but they are just very localized to that area, so I wish there was a more central locations where you could see all of the events."

Did this conversation reveal a specific, repeatable problem? (Yes / No)

One-sentence takeaway:

They are able to find events but would prefer a more centralized location to find out about events since they tend to miss out on events they are interested on at least once a month."
